

FIGURE 76e-40 Molluscum contagiosum is a cutaneous poxvirus infection characterized by multiple umbilicated flesh-colored or hypopigmented papules. (Courtesy of Yale Resident's Slide Collection; with permission.)

FIGURE 76e-43 Rocky Mountain spotted fever, with pinpoint petechial lesions on the palm and volar aspect of the wrist. (Courtesy of Robert Swerlick, MD; with permission.)

FIGURE 76e-41 Oral hairy leukoplakia often presents as white plaques on the lateral tongue and is associated with Epstein-Barr virus infection. (From K Wolff et al: Fitzpatrick's Color Atlas & Synopsis of Clinical Dermatology, 5th ed. New York, McGraw-Hill, 2005. www.accessmedicine.com.)

FIGURE 76e-44 Erythema migrans, the early cutaneous manifestation of Lyme disease, is characterized by erythematous annular patches, often with a central erythematous papule at the tick-bite site. (Courtesy of Yale Resident's Slide Collection; with permission.)

FIGURE 76e-42 Fulminant meningococemia, with extensive angular purpuric patches. (Courtesy of Stephen D. Gellis, MD; with permission.)

FIGURE 76e-45 Primary syphilis, with a firm, nontender chancre. (Courtesy of Gregory Cox, MD; with permission.)